HEMEROCALLIS

The hemerocallis, commonly known as daylilies, will add soft or gay colors to your garden all through the season. An established clump of most varieties will bloom for a month, and some for a longer period, as some rebloom. A daylily needs to be left at least three years in a position before it gives its maximum performance. Use the clear yellow and cream-colored varieties to give sunshine color to your perennial border, and plant the strong-colored ones against evergreens or shrubs for a bold effect of "something different."

We send out strong roots, guaranteed true to name. They can be planted either spring or fall.
